

VIENNA MIGRATION CONFERENCE 2023

10-11 October 2023

Programme

The Vienna Migration Conference 2023 (VMC2023) will take place on 10-11 October in Vienna and online. During two days of lively discussions, this year's conference will touch key themes, including labour migration dynamics, flanked by insights on the future of work and rapid urban transformations; the desire for safe and orderly migration is seen against policy frictions between managing borders and the imperative to protect people on the move; views are exchanged on the results delivered and promised by new initiatives, cooperation and partnerships; and discussions take stock of efforts to move the European policy framework forward.

Now in its 8th edition, VMC is ICMPD's annual flagship event. Every autumn, a diverse expert group of decision-makers and practitioners from governments, international organisations, academia, and civil society come together in Vienna for two days of high-level discussions on contemporary migration trends and dynamics in Europe and beyond. ICMPD livestreams these discussions to bring them to the doorstep of the wider global migration community.

2023 has seen extreme weather events attributed to climate change, widespread labour shortages, and a rise in irregular migration to Europe, underscoring the need to foster sustainable growth, recruit and develop the needed workforce, and provide more legal mobility pathways. Against this backdrop, this session will explore how human mobility can serve the green transition, therefore drawing attention to the opportunity side of the mobility-climate change nexus. Speakers will review the current state of play of the green economy and labour market needs and discuss how major initiatives such as the European Green Deal, the EU's Skills Agenda, and the New Pact on Migration and Asylum can contribute to advancing a new paradigm that turns climate crisis into opportunity.

- Raffaella Greco Tonegutti, Head of Unit, Human Mobility, Enabel - Belgian Development Agency, Belgium
- Diederik de Boer, Associate Professor of Sustainable Business Development and Director of the Expert Centre on Emerging Economies, Maastricht School of Management, University of Maastricht

14.30 – 15.45 Panel discussion A new era for labour migration?

Widespread labour shortages in both traditional and non-traditional migrant destination countries are putting increased pressure on governments to review the way they manage labour migration, design international partnerships, and attract global talent. Migration partnerships are built by listening and investing time and resources to meet each other's needs and interests. This session illustrates how partnerships are being put into practice, at different levels and across all areas of migration governance, with the aim of delivering concrete results. Panellists share their experiences and views on good practices, engaging in a discussion about which international cooperation frameworks are needed to maximise opportunities and minimise challenges confronting migrants, returnees, and the societies they live in.

War in Ukraine has helped harmonise European perceptions of collective defence, external threats, economic self-interest, and humanitarian obligations. And yet, on certain issues, internal divisions remain sharp: enlargement, the rule of law, climate change, transatlantic ties, and migration. Two veteran EU observers discuss whether Europe can still stand united as a geopolitical player in a global system that is characterised more and more by great power rivalry and competition.

09.30 – 10.30 In conversation People on the move: Protecting lives, managing borders

Around the world, thousands of migrants risk their lives by taking dangerous land and sea migration routes, not least across the Sahara and the Mediterranean. Policies that steer border and immigration control must seek to protect and keep the state, its population, and people on the move safe and secure. ### 11.45 – 12.45 Panel discussion A vision for Europe's migration policy framework

A sensitive and often controversial issue, migration will determine the future of Europe's integration process as well as crucially contribute to defining Europe's external action. A breakthrough political agreement the New Pact on Migration and Asylum reached at the Home Affairs Council on 8 June raised hopes that a comprehensive package can be finalized before European elections take place next year. Yet, negotiations are still in full swing, the exact outcome remaining far from certain. Spain, holding the Presidency of the Council, will kick off this session and take stock of how far we have come and where we currently stand.

- Javier Conde y Martínez de Irujo, Deputy Director-General for Justice and Home Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, European Union and Cooperation, Spain

Two distinguished speakers then chime in on the most recent developments in European migration governance and discuss what may lie ahead as migration remains front and centre in discussions among European decision-makers and publics.

- Ulrich Weinbrenner, Director General, Directorate General for Migration, Refugees and Return Policy, Federal Ministry of the Interior and Community, Germany
- Jean-Louis De Brouwer, Director, European Affairs Programme, Egmont Institute
- Sarah Schlaeger, Senior Lead Policy and Liaison, Brussels Mission, ICMPD

12.45 – 13.30 Conference closing

The conference will wrap up with key stakeholders offering their takeaways on the themes toured by VMC2023, with a view to understanding what is next in migration governance. Representatives from the media, think tank, and private sectors will identify topics that deserve closer scrutiny and further debate, thus kicking off the process leading to VMC2024.

- Ana Sofia Walsh, Senior Knowledge Manager, Fragomen
- Laura Dubois, EU correspondent for migration, Financial Times
